lege rodeo team, competing in barrels and breakaway, she sees the potential to franchise RTP in order to serve more kids. She's also passionate in her desire to see the program add terminally ill children to its client roster.

Ride To Pride is a nonprofit 501 (c) 3 organization that seeks donations, sponsorships, and endorsements through its Web site at www.ridetopride.org. Board President Amy McFall first learned of the program years ago when her own daughter Maxine became a client. Now McFall speaks of the program's persistent funding challenges. Growing Ride To Pride's services has always come easier than making ends meet, and fundraising is an everpresent need.

My Two Cents

I don't remember the product this commercial was selling some time ago, but in it people would call a hotline to ask about a certain scenario. The hotline person would rate the ironic, considering my chosen profession. I have a better idea! I think we ought to have a hotline to rate how stupid someone is being and how hard we can slap faux pas and tell the caller if they could laugh and how hard. But rating humor is not what I have in mind; which is

him or her in the head. I'm not talking hitting someone so hard as to cause brain damage; just a quick V-8 smack of the heel of your hand to their forehead. Or perhaps you would prefer the penalty to be a good swift kick in the pants. Either one works for me.

My daughter, Joanna, thinks the hotline ought to also include popping someone in the back of the neck with the flexible end of a fishing rod as an alternative response. Rosemary, my other daughter, said that there ought to be a limit to how many stupid offenses a person could have before they were locked up.

There are so many stupid offenders know where to start drawing the line. To be fair, there should be a huge panel representing a diverse population. Now I realize that some of the panel members would be stupid offenders, but the smart ones would weed them out. Although there are so many incidences to choose from, there are several examples I would suggest if I were on the panel.

One of the first groups of people I would round up and head slap are the people who decided to pay professional performers and athletes exuberant salaries while the people who educate our nation's children are among the lowest on the professional pay scale. Most teachers I met when I worked in the schools had to get summer work painting houses, waiting tables or working in a retail store to support their families. Art programs, music programs and field trips have been put on the chopping block in most public schools because the district can no longer afford them. To reduce the costs of liability insurance, many elementary schools have canceled recesses and removed their playground equipment.

Is that stupid, or what?

Meanwhile, grown men and women are being paid millions of dollars to play a game, drive around in circles, beat the crap out of each other in a ring or ride bicycles, skateboards or snowboards. And don't forget the entertainers. I guess they need big salaries considering the number of them who end up in rehab...several times. Have you noticed the number of and actors/actresses in the movies lately? Many producers would rather pay for a dialect coach than deal with snotty, whiny, strung-out American performers. And don't even get me started about how professional athletes and performers are held to a different standard of behavior than the rest of

And while I'm on the education angle, please find me the idiots who decided that chicken nuggets, pizza, burgers and hotdogs were good entrée selections for school lunches? Yes, kids like those things, but they are the least healthy food choices on the planet. And please do not wrap a burger in a tortilla and call it good. Yes, a tortilla is a healthier choice than a bun, but here's a newsflash, the really bad part...is the hamburger! And despite warnings about the dangers of processed foods, that is exactly what is served at schools every day. It used to be that the lunch ladies cooked everything from fresh foods. The only processed foods were canned vegetables and applesauce. Now, the cooks open boxes of processed foods and heat them up. When your kid tells you that their chicken nugget lunch tasted like cardboard, you'll know why.

Speaking of school lunches, when did ketchup, mustard and a lettuce leaf become a side dish? Have you ever listened to the school lunch menus on the radio? It goes something like this: "For school lunch today, hamburger on a bun, ketchup, mustard, lettuce, tomato, fresh fruit and milk." It sounds like a buffet, doesn't it? Let's call it what it really is - a sandwich, a piece of fruit and a carton of milk. So school menu writers, get it together or prepare to pay the price.

How about the people who complain about their cell phone bills because of all the texting their kids do on their phones? Cell phones in schools are taboo, but many of the kids are carrying them and using them anyway. As far as I know, schools aren't handing out phones, so who is buying them for the kids? Texting has become such a problem that lawmakers have written a slew of laws controlling it.

In the doctor's office I saw a mother with a 9-year-old and a 12-year-old who came strolling through the door, each on a different cell phone. They were still talking when I came out after my visit. Parents, if you don't want a huge cell phone bill - don't give your kids a cell phone! Bottom line...you can't complain if you're the source. If you do, someone may call the stupid

The same goes for people who buy their daughters mini skirts, revealing tops, etc., and then wonder why their daughter dresses so risqué. I had one mother tell me once that she hought those kinds of clothes because that is all that is available. I guarantee that if the consumers refused to buy the trashy clothes, the styles will change. It's a matter of supply and demand. Smack!

Think about it. I guarantee you can think of lots of guidelines for the stupid hotline, too. Before you know it, life could get a little better for all of us. Granted, there are going to be lots of us out there with red marks on our foreheads or shoe prints on our behinds, but hey, it's a small price to pay for peaceful progress!

Icy sidewalks were responsible for a local Catholic nun falling and breaking a leg here yesterday afternoon. Sister Jean Teresa, walking on the sidewalk, approached the corner of Church and Beech streets when she slipped on the ice-coated walkway and fell. Authoritives at Mt. San Rafael Hospital said today that she suffered a broken leg bone just above the angle and added that it was not a compound fracture. X-rays were taken and the leg was placed in a cast by hospital physicians. Sister Jean Teresa was released from the hospital today.

The postal receipts of the calendar year for 1909 show that there has been a marked increase in business of Uncle Sam during the year over the previous year. Including box rent and postage the total was $29,899.96 as compared with $28,781.81 in 1908, $28,427.58 in 1907 and $26,099.69 in 1906. The total number of registered articles transmitted through the local post offrice in 1909 was 9,117, which was also an increase over previous years. All of this shows clearly that the business of the post office has grown and necissitates larger quarters, which the new federal building now under construction will furnish.

Trinidad man arrested, charged with DUI

Special to the Chronicle-News

The Colorado State Patrol is currently investigating two crashes involving the same vehicle that occurred on Colorado 12 near milepost 69 on Sunday. The first incident took place at approximately 10:30 a.m., with the second occurring at 10:55 a.m.

A blue 1989 GMC 3500, driven by David A. Jones of Trinidad, attempted to enter Colorado 12 from a private drive, turning east. A second vehicle, a blue 2001 Ford F150, driven by Frank A. Falsetto, also of Trinidad, was westbound on Colorado 12. Jones entered the roadway and Falsetto veered to the right, colliding left front with the left rear of Jones' vehicle. Jones fled the scene, traveling eastbound after the impact with Falsetto, which ran him off the right side of the road.

Approximately 25 minutes later, Jones returned to the scene, traveling westbound on Colorado 12. At this time, Edward S. Estes, a witness to the earlier incident, observed the hit-and-run vehicle approaching and stepped into the roadway to flag the vehicle over. The vehicle accelerated and continued westbound, its left mirror and rear wheel well colliding with the pedestrian.

Shortly thereafter, Parks Officer Russ Palone contacted the hit-andrun vehicle at Trinidad Lake and advised CSP Dispatch. Cpl. Stan Chacon then arrived on scene with the hit-and-run driver and subsequently placed Jones under arrest. Trooper Randy DeCristino responded to the crash scene and contacted all parties on scene.

Alcohol was determined to be a factor in both crashes.

All parties were transported to Mt. San Rafael Hospital and released with minor injuries.
