

Niederman celebrates food in 10th book

Raton's Sharon Niederman is all over New Mexico this month on a promotional tour for her 10th book, published this week by New Mexico Magazine. "New Mexico's Tasty Treats: recollections, recipes and photos" consolidates and builds upon years of magazine features. Niederman has produced to order for Sunset Magazine, New Mexico Magazine, Herb Companion, and others.

Niederman's bright, colorful photographs perfectly set the tone for a celebratory book on New Mexico's diverse food traditions. She visits the families of miners, cowboys, Native Americans, and various ethnic groups.

"I wanted to go beyond red and green," she explained at home last week. "I wanted to explore in my essays the love that people have for their traditions and how we sustain our traditions and cultures. I wanted to show how we gain our sense of place from our traditions."

She continued, "It was often assignments from the magazines that brought me to these traditions." The assignments stretched back as far as 15 years, but she began preparing the book three years ago, revisiting, expanding, and supplementing the earlier materials. The result is what Niederman calls, "A fun book, a happy book, a celebration."

Sixteen chapters are supplemented with a statewide calendar of food festivals, bringing the length to 137 pages. The paperback book is available for $27.50 from all book retailers or from New Mexico Magazine at www.nmmagazine.com or 1(800) 711-9525.

The back cover proclaims, "an armchair tour of cafes, ranches, festivals, home kitchens, and farmers markets through the eyes of veteran food-travel writer Sharon Niederman."

Content includes green chile in Hatch and pies in Pie Town. It's not a cookbook, but each chapter includes some recipes. Niederman explores how food is grown and then prepared. She pays attention to history and utensils in a hands-on immersion with what she calls New Mexico's foodways.

Local northeastern New Mexico visits include the cakewalk at the Colfax County Fair, foraging for chokecherries along the Cimarron River, and an entire chapter spent learning to make potica bread with Raton's Betty Antonucci. "A citrus-flavored loaf, very rich but not too sweet," Niederman learns that potica has long been a treasured holiday tradition, especially in coal-camp culture. Antonucci learned the Italian version from her mother while growing up in Pueblo. The bread is made at Christmas, but it's also popular for Easter, weddings, and birthdays. The next in Niederman's book-signings are Dec. 4 at Collected Works in Santa Fe, Dec. 5 at Bookworks in Albuquerque, and Dec. 12 at Tome on the Range in Las Vegas, NM.
